

Craig Zodikoff

Managing Principal San Francisco

Professional Experience

Craig Zodikoff serves as Managing Principal for Cresa's San Francisco office. His real estate experience includes real estate portfolio and workplace strategy, financial analysis, mergers and acquisitions, build-to-suits, site selection, labor analysis, state and municipal incentives and dispositions. He has completed several hundred transactions ranging from 1,200-1.3 million square feet in urban, suburban and remote markets and has managed individual accounts in excess of 17 million square feet.

Craig's experience in commercial real estate is preceded by three years in the practice of law. His deep understanding of corporate structures, liability issues, and real estate transactions has served his clients well. Through regional, national and global account relationships, Craig has led projects within every asset type from sales offices to headquarters, R&D to major distribution centers, including over 8 million square feet of build to suit projects. His expertise spans many industries including financial services, law firms, life sciences, technology, non-profits, consumer products and manufacturing.

Prior to joining Cresa, Craig was the Managing Director of Corporate Services for GVA Worldwide's San Francisco office. Prior to that he managed Equis Corporation's San Francisco brokerage operations for over five years, where he focused on both regional and national accounts. A top producer, Craig has been quoted in multiple real estate periodicals and presented on industry panels. At the beginning of his career, Craig was a practicing attorney focusing in the areas of corporate law, bankruptcy and commercial real estate.
